Coping with chemical waste: What next?

By Casey Bjorn

DESPITE that research, the plateau-obsessed experts concede that we are still in the infancy of tailored chemical waste disposal. Venture capital is pouring into companies that promise to clean up the mess. The next big thing in chemical waste disposal is undoubtedly going to be the development of more sophisticated and selective methods for separating out hazardous substances from the waste.

By Catherine T. Smith

Shoeing campaigns knotty problem for candidate

By Jon Margolis

Shoeing campaigns haven't changed much in the past few decades. Candidates still spend hours polishing their boots and shoes, and it's still a big deal. But with the rise of social media, candidates are finding new ways to reach their constituents.

By Dorothy Colin

Congress heads home after budget battles

By John Stempel

The end of the year is always a busy time for Congress. Members are working frantically to finish up legislation and get back to their districts for the holidays. The budget battles are just one of many challenges they face.